OFFICE OF SPECIAL MASTERS

No. 24-1751V

UNPUBLISHED

JOHN MORRIS,

Petitioner,

SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,

Respondent.

Chief Special Master Corcoran

Filed: June 18, 2025

Bijan Esfandiari, Wisner Baum, LLP, Los Angeles, CA, for Petitioner.

Heather L. Pearlman, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC, for Respondent.

DECISION¹

On October 25, 2024, John Morris filed a petition for compensation under the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program, 42 U.S.C. § 300aa—10 through 34² (the “Vaccine Act”). Petitioner alleges that he suffered various injuries from human papillomavirus (“HPV”) vaccinations he received on January 5, 2015, March 17, 2015, and July 30, 2015. ECF No. 1 at 2.

Because the petition was untimely filed, and Petitioner has failed to establish a basis for equitable tolling, this case is DISMISSED.

Relevant Factual Background

As alleged in the petition³, Petitioner stated that he received HPV vaccinations on January 5, 2015, March 17, 2015, and July 30, 2015. ECF No. 1 at 2. In the days and

If, upon review, I agree that the identified material fits within this definition, I will redact such material from public access.

³ Petitioner has not filed any medical records to establish the vaccinations or his injuries. I will assume the accuracy of the facts in the petition to resolve the statute of limitations issue.

weeks after the January 5, 2015 HPV vaccination, Petitioner stated that he experienced “chest pain, anxiety, panic, and insomnia.” ECF No. 1 ¶ 5. Within two weeks of the vaccination, he experienced “fatigue, migraine headaches, erectile dysfunction, lightheadedness, brain fog, short-term memory deficits, difficulty standing, and sensitivity to light.” Id. Petitioner was later diagnosed with postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome (POTS) and chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS). Id. ¶ 9.

Petitioner alleged the preceding medical history in the petition and repeated the history in his response to the order to show cause. Facially, Petitioner’s claim herein was filed over nine years after the HPV vaccinations, which were administered in 2015, and over nine years from the time he began manifesting symptoms in 2015. But Petitioner maintains his delay is excusable. Petitioner has stated that, at the time these vaccinations occurred, no Vaccine Information Statements (VIS) were provided and no information was relayed about the Vaccine Program. Petitioner stated that he became aware that the HPV vaccine could have potential adverse effect in March 2023.

Relevant Procedural History

Given that the timeliness of the claim was legitimately called into question merely by the face of the actual Petition, while the case was still in the initial “pre-assignment review,”⁴ I ordered Petitioner to show cause why the claim had not been filed outside the Act’s 36-month statute of limitations. Sec. 16(a)(2); ECF No. 6.

On August 9, 2024, Petitioner filed a response. ECF No. 8. Petitioner did not dispute that his symptoms begin in 2015, or that his petition was filed in 2024 (and not sooner than the statute of limitations deadline of 2018), but instead argued that the limitations period should be equitably tolled. Petitioner asserted that he had diligently pursued his rights once he became aware of his legal rights. Petitioner also made allegations not relevant to a Vaccine Act claim, about the perfidious conduct of the vaccine manufacturer in fraudulently concealing the HPV vaccine’s harmful character from the public. ECF No. 8 at 6. Relatedly, Petitioner argued that the failure of a healthcare professional to provide him with a VIS at the time of vaccination can be attributed to the Department of Health and Human Services’ failure to systematically ensure that VIS are explained and provided to all vaccine recipients. Id. at 8.

Respondent submitted a brief of his own, arguing for dismissal due to untimeliness.⁵ ECF No. 7. Respondent maintained that Petitioner in fact had not diligently pursued his rights before filing a vaccine claim in 2024. Respondent also disputed the veracity of contentions about the manufacturer's conduct, and whether it could in any event constitute an extraordinary circumstance that would serve as a basis for tolling of the statute.

Legal Standards

The Vaccine Act's statute of limitations is thirty-six months. Sec. 16(a)(2). The statute begins to run from the manifestation of the first objectively cognizable symptom, whether or not that symptom is sufficient for diagnosis (or even recognized by a claimant as significant). Id.; Carson v. Sec'y of Health & Hum. Servs., 727 F.3d 1365, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 2013).

The Federal Circuit has held that the doctrine of equitable tolling can apply to Vaccine Act's statute of limitations. See Cloer v. Sec'y of Health & Hum. Servs., 654 F.3d 1322, 1340-41 (Fed. Cir. 2011). However, in keeping with applicable U.S. Supreme Court precedent, equitable tolling of a limitations period is to be permitted "sparingly." Irwin v. Dep't of Veterans Affairs, 498 U.S. 89, 96, (1990). The appropriateness of equitable tolling is ultimately to be determined on a case-by-case basis, without rigid application of any relevant overarching guidelines. Holland v. Florida, 560 U.S. 631, 649–50 (2010); accord Arctic Slope Native Ass'n v. Sebelius, 699 F.3d 1289, 1295 (Fed. Cir. 2012).

Petitioners must prove two elements to establish equitable tolling: (1) that petitioner diligently pursued her rights, and (2) an extraordinary circumstance prevented her from timely filing the claim. K.G. v. Sec'y of Health & Hum. Servs., 951 F.3d 1374, 1379 (Fed. Cir. 2020) (citing Menominee Indian Tribe v. United States, 577 U.S. 250, 255 (2016)).

When first articulating this limited exception to equitable tolling, the Federal Circuit primarily enumerated fraud and duress as a basis for equitable tolling—but not, for example, lack of awareness on a petitioner's part that she might have an actionable claim. Cloer, 654 F.3d at 1344–45 (noting that tolling of the Vaccine Act's statute of limitations period is not triggered “due to unawareness of a causal link between an injury and administration of a vaccine”). In K.G., 951 F.3d at 1380–82 (Fed. Cir. 2020), the Circuit more explicitly endorsed the proposition that an individual’s demonstrated mental incapacity could be a basis for equitable tolling in the Program. For a mentally incapacitated individual, the Circuit instructed that the details of the individual’s relationship with her legal guardian would affect whether there was reasonable diligence or extraordinary circumstances. K.G., 951 F.3d at 1382 (Fed. Cir. 2020). More recently, the Circuit concluded that a parent acting as a legal guardian did not have extraordinary circumstances preventing the filing of a petition where the parent: (1) routinely made medical decisions on behalf of the legally incapacitated individual during the relevant time period, (2) had no documented strained relationship with the individual, and (3) had no conflicts of interest dissuading the parent from filing a petition. W.J. v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., 93 F.4th 1228, 1241 (Fed. Cir. 2024).

⁵ Respondent filed his "response" to Petitioner's arguments before Petitioner had submitted his filing with those arguments. For context, this case is part on ongoing series of vaccine cases (over 50 at this point) that were filed beyond the statute of limitations deadline and have all presented the same legal arguments regarding the equitable tolling of that deadline. Since Respondent has standardized his response to these legal arguments, Respondent has chosen in some cases to file his response before Petitioner files a response to the order to show cause. As I ruled in other cases where the petitioner objected to Respondent's early filing of his response, I understand Respondent to have waived any right to later reply to Petitioner's response (if it happened to contain arguments not anticipated by Respondent) and find that Petitioner was not prejudiced or harmed by Respondent's deviation from the standard sequence of responsive filings.

Analysis

The untimeliness of this filing is acknowledged by Petitioner, so the only question to be resolved is whether equitable tolling should save the claim. But Petitioner has failed to establish both elements of equitable tolling – diligent pursuit and extraordinary circumstances.

A) Diligent pursuit

Petitioner argues that he began to diligently pursue his claim when he learned of the possibility of adverse effects from vaccines in March 2023.

These arguments are wholly unpersuasive. It is beyond question that claims asserted in the Vaccine Program are not subject to a “discovery rule,” accruing only when a claimant learns he or she might possess a cause of action. Rather, the statute of limitations period is triggered by the onset of Petitioner’s symptoms – whether or not onset was understood to be the start of the claimed injurious illness or condition. Cloer v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., 654 F.3d 1322, 1340 (Fed. Cir. 2011) (en banc). And the failure to be advised of the Vaccine Program or the Act does not support equitable tolling of the statute of limitations period for an otherwise-untimely filed petition. Speights v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., No. 03-2619V, 2013 WL 5944084, at *13 (Fed. Cl. Spec. Mstr. Oct. 17, 2013). Thus, a petitioner cannot generally shield an untimely claim from dismissal by asserting, even in good faith, that she literally was unaware of her Vaccine Act “rights.”

B) Extraordinary Circumstances

Petitioner’s arguments about the purported fraudulent conduct of the vaccine’s manufacturer, in hiding proof of the vaccine’s dangers, deserve even less consideration.

ECF No. 8 at 6. As a threshold matter, these contentions are speculative and not evidentiarily-supported. And regardless of their actual truth, the fact remains that the Government has approved the HPV vaccine for administration to minors, rendering it “covered” under the Act. The only issue to be resolved in a Program case is whether (assuming, as here, the claim is not a Table claim) the claim meets the standards for causation – and those standards have nothing to do with a manufacturer’s alleged misconduct in preparation or promotion of the underlying vaccine.

These allegations also are not a basis for tolling under the circumstances. Petitioner simply has not shown that contentions of corporate misconduct not specific to, or directed at, him personally could rise to the level of the kind of “fraud” that might excuse failing to file a Program claim in a timely manner. Nor has he persuasively established that the vaccine administrator’s “failure to warn,” or provide a VIS in 2015, is an extraordinary circumstance. Even assuming the factual accuracy of that allegation,⁶ it remains the case (as the Circuit recognized in Cloer) that vaccine claims accrue upon onset – and that the failure to be advised of the Vaccine Program does not support equitable tolling. Cloer, 654 F.3d at 1340; see also Speights, 2013 WL 5944084, at *13. And arguments about governmental agency knowledge of a failure to warn reflect overheated, almost-conspiratorial allegations that do not come close to excusing the claim’s untimely nature.

Finally, Petitioner also asserts that the safety of the HPV vaccine is “heavily disputed and should not be resolved on these papers alone.” ECF No. 8 at 31. But this argument willfully ignores the extent to which I have personally ruled in numerous prior cases that medical science does not preponderantly support the contention that the HPV vaccine can cause various autonomic issues. See, e.g., Hughes v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., No. 16-930V, 2021 WL 839092, at *31 (Fed. Cl. Spec. Mstr. Jan. 4, 2021), mot. for review denied, 154 Fed. Cl. 640 (2021); E.S. v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., No. 17-480V, 2020 WL 9076620, at *40, 43 (Fed. Cl. Spec. Mstr. Nov. 13, 2020), mot. for review denied, 154 Fed. Cl. 149 (2021); McKown v. Sec’y of Health & Hum. Servs., No. 15-1451V, 2019 WL 4072113, at *44–45 (Fed. Cl. Spec. Mstr. July 15, 2019). The Act does not require that the same theory rejected so many times before must be relitigated by the Program ad infinitum (especially in the absence of new compelling evidence). Rather, special masters are expressly empowered to rely on their expertise, earned in adjudicating Program cases, in subsequent similar matters. To suggest that they should ignore what they have learned in that process reveals a complete miscomprehension of the Program’s underlying goals and purposes.

⁶ As noted above, Petitioner has not filed any medical records, let alone the vaccination records, that would permit a factual evaluation of whether a VIS was provided to Petitioner at any of the vaccination appointments.

Conclusion

Thus, Petitioner has failed to establish equitable tolling. This case is dismissed for being untimely filed. The Clerk of Court shall enter judgment accordingly.⁷
